

YKBA Christmas Wish List

Nov 23, 2009

By: Apple Forbsington

It's about 5 weeks into the YKBA season seems brief, but in a league that lasts 4 1/2 months 5 weeks is a good chunk of the season gone down the drain. The early trend we can see is that there is a definite gap between the teams at the top of of the food chain and the bottom feeders.

You have a team that blows out opponents and the other team on top has pulled out some close games. While the other 3 exchange wins and loses with each other and hope to pull out a "W" against the top teams, or they are content not getting blown out by 20 points

So, Christmas is just around the corner and everyone is getting their wish list in order and about to send them to Santa Claus early to avoid the rush so they can get what they want. Here is what a possible items on teams wish list.

For those of you who don't know the address is:

Santa Claus
North Pole, H0H 0H0
Canada

JSL

JSL aka Mildred Hall School Pavement Hall of Fame, have the talent to contend for status of "best of the worst". First thing on their list is a lifetime supply of Red Bulls for veteran Ronnie Leonardis to fuel his miracle shots. Christmas has already come early for the JSL team with the return of work horse Cordel Corothers. Back from another season with the Victoria Rebels football team, "CoCo" is primed to be a force on the glass and the defensive end. Good luck out muscling him for a rebound.

UpHere 76'ers

What has happened to these guys? One year removed from their most promising season that ended in a loss to eventual champs, The Medic North Mavs, they collapse and are a team in limbo. The 76'ers are probably missing their old backcourt of Damien Healy and Emmanuel Ramos right now, who were both lost in the offseason. Too bad I don't think bringing them back this season is out of Santa's realm. However another key contributors from last year is seemingly gone as well, Jason Cutten. They need more consistency out of him night in and night out. Cutten's scoring lines in his first four games 16, 2, 13, 4. They are wondering who are they gonna get Dr. Jeckyl of Mr. Hyde.

Hot Shots Junior Men

Unlike the other teams most of the guys on this squad still write to Santa Claus. Santa needs to bring Alinar's Irish pride to the YKBA court. He needs to play with the aggressiveness he plays with at cager time to the Junior Men. Matt Craig needs to become Cordel v.2.0. If Matt Craig can do the intangibles they'll win an extra game or two. Coach Shaun should try to create a play that allows for a backdoor alley-oop pass. He has two high risers on his team, Chad Hinchey and Lucas Malmsten, with a third emerging (Raymond). Wouldn't it be nice to see an alley-oop dunk, not a layup like the old ryfan days with Josh Campbell and Rug, in the YKBA?

Boston Pizza Bulldogs

They are hoping CT wins the Lottery and takes a trip around the world (which Cory probably wouldn't mind). With that being said the chances of winning the lottery is about 1 in 14 million, don't count on it but keep your fingers crossed. Second thing they should ask for is more offensive fire power. They average about 67 points a game, whereas the Mavs average 87 points a game. More 28 point games for Hurley. Who would have thought entering this season Dave Hurley would be averaging more points than Rug, Judas, Pietro, Hash and The Commish. Keep up the good work.

Medic North Mavs

The Mavs are on the naughty list this year for all the blow out wins they have had. So being on the naughty list they have gotten stuck with Cole. Cole Marshall that is. Enough said.
